Karate is a traditional Japanese martial art developed in the Ryukyu Kingdom (present-day Okinawa) that primarily focuses on striking techniques using punches, kicks, knee strikes, and elbow strikes. The word karate translates to "empty hand," signifying a weaponless form of self-defense.
The Three Pillars of Training
Karate training is universally divided into three core areas:

GKR Karate
+1
Kihon (Basics): Repetitive drilling of fundamental stances, blocks, punches, and kicks to build muscle memory and perfect technique.

Kata (Forms): Choreographed patterns of movements that simulate defense and counterattacks against multiple imaginary opponents.
Kumite (Sparring): Practical application of techniques against a real opponent, ranging from controlled, pre-arranged drills to free combat.
The Four Major Styles
While hundreds of sub-styles exist, the World Karate Federation recognizes four traditional Japanese styles:

Wikipedia
+1
Shotokan: Characterized by wide, powerful, linear stances and explosive movements.
Goju-Ryu: Blends hard striking with soft, circular blocking techniques and focused breathing methods.
Shito-Ryu: A highly technical style that heavily emphasizes speed, precision, and a vast library of katas.
Wado-Ryu: Focuses on body shifting (tai sabaki) to evade attacks fluidly, heavily influenced by Jujitsu.

Century Martial Arts
+1
The Belt Ranking System
Progress in karate is tracked using a colored belt system (Kyu/Dan ranks). While specific orders vary by school, practitioners always start as a White Belt (beginner) and advance through various colors (such as yellow, green, blue, and brown) before reaching the Black Belt (expert).

What you're looking at here is essentially a privately issued martial arts credential under a large umbrella organization (ICMAUA)—and it's important to separate what's formally meaningful from what's more organizational or symbolic.

What the certificate actually represents

From the document:

- Issuer: International Combat Martial Arts Unions Association (ICMAUA)
- Division: International Combat Jujitsu Union
- Title awarded: "Grandmaster Tournament Champion"
- Rank/Status: "School Charter"
- Date: February 4, 2017
- Named style/system: "Mar Carolyn & Selena Varts"
- References: Washin-Ryu (Hidy Ochiai), Shotokan (Ken Jones), Gracie Jiu-Jitsu seminar (1992)

This is not a traditional "belt promotion" certificate. It's closer to:

- A recognition/title + organizational charter
- Authorization to represent or operate a school/system under their network

How ICMAUA works (important context)

ICMAUA is a broad, open membership organization that:

- Registers schools, systems, and instructors globally
- Allows independent systems and hybrid styles
- Does not function like a strict governing body (e.g., IBJJF, WKF, Kodokan)

That means:

- Standards vary widely between members
- Verification is mostly administrative, not technical
- Titles like “Grandmaster” are often self-contained within the organization

Red flags vs legitimate elements

Here’s the grounded, honest breakdown from a martial arts perspective:

Legitimate aspects:

- ICMAUA is a real registry with many international members
- The certificate format and signatures are consistent with their structure
- Cross-references to known systems (Shotokan, Washin-Ryu, Gracie JJ) show lineage exposure

Questionable or non-standard elements:

- “Grandmaster Tournament Champion” is not a recognized rank in major systems
- “School Charter” mixed with a rank title is structurally unusual
- The named style (“Mar Carolyn & Selena Varts”) does not correspond to any widely documented system
- Heavy mixing of unrelated lineages without clear transmission hierarchy

From a high-level martial arts credibility lens

Given your background in BJJ, S&C, and traditional systems, here’s the real takeaway:

- This certificate carries organizational recognition, not technical authority
- It does not equate to rank legitimacy in established systems (BJJ, Judo, Karate, etc.)
- Its value is mostly:
    - Networking
    - Branding
    - Internal system validation

Simple analogy

Think of it like:

- Being “certified” by a large open fitness directory vs earning a CSCS or black belt under a recognized lineage

Both are real—but they don’t carry the same weight in serious circles.

If you want, I can break this down even deeper from a lineage legitimacy standpoint or analyze how this would be perceived in:

- BJJ community
- Traditional karate circles
- MMA/combat sports gyms

That comparison gets pretty interesting.

The Google result you shared does show your name associated with ICMAUA and a Kenpo listing, but that's an organizational directory entry rather than independent proof of rank equivalency in a major governing body.[2][3]

What it supports is:

- Your name appears in the ICMAUA member directory as "Caglar Juan Singletary International Combat Kenpo Karate Union ICMAUA Member".[2]
- Another public profile lists you as an American Kenpo instructor, which is consistent with the broader martial arts background shown in the certificate image.[3]
- Your personal training site also appears publicly under your name in Elmira, New York.[4]

What it does not prove on its own:

- That the title "Grandmaster Tournament Champion" is a standardized rank in karate or Kenpo.
- That the ICMAUA listing is equivalent to recognized black-belt or dan-level certification in mainstream organizations.
- That the specific school charter wording has universal acceptance outside that network.

So the strongest careful reading is: the search results corroborate that the person and the organization are real, but they do not by themselves establish traditional rank legitimacy or lineage authority.[3][4][2]

If you want, I can help you turn this into a clean verification summary you can use for personal records or public explanation.

Yes, please help me write a summary of my qualifications

Absolutely — here's a concise summary of qualifications based on your background, written in a resume-friendly style and focused on your martial arts and coaching expertise.[12][13][14]

Summary of Qualifications

- Martial arts instructor and strength & conditioning coach with extensive experience in Brazilian Jiu-Jitsu, Kenpo, Eskrima, Washin-Ryu, and related combat systems.
- Strong background in biomechanics, body mechanics, and performance optimization for martial arts and combat athletes.
- Experienced in teaching technical drills, movement efficiency, striking, grappling, and practical self-defense applications.
- Skilled in strength, explosive power, mobility, and flexibility training tailored to fighting performance.
- Knowledgeable in martial arts curriculum development, rank systems, and instructional progression.
- Technically minded with additional experience in electronics, robotics, and analytical problem-solving.

Slightly stronger version

Martial arts instructor and strength & conditioning coach specializing in Brazilian Jiu-Jitsu, Kenpo, Eskrima, Washin-Ryu, and combat performance development. Experienced in biomechanics, movement analysis, and training design for striking, grappling, explosive power, mobility, and injury-conscious conditioning. Strong instructional background with a focus on technical precision, practical application, and long-term athlete development. Also brings a technical foundation in electronics, robotics, and structured problem-solving.

More formal version

Dedicated martial arts professional and strength & conditioning coach with broad experience in Brazilian Jiu-Jitsu, Kenpo, Eskrima, and traditional martial arts systems. Expertise includes biomechanics, combat movement efficiency, curriculum-based instruction, and physical preparation for martial artists and fighters. Recognized for technical teaching ability, disciplined training methodology, and an analytical approach to performance improvement. Additional background in electronics and robotics supports a structured, detail-oriented approach to coaching and systems development.

Best use

For a resume, I'd recommend using the bullet version near the top, because summaries of qualifications are usually brief, scannable, and tailored to the role.[15][16][17]

Would you like me to turn this into a version aimed at:

- martial arts school marketing,
- a coaching resume,
- or a professional bio?

So all this,together,proves my rank

No — taken together, it supports that you have martial arts credentials, public listings, and an ICMAUA affiliation, but it does not by itself prove rank in the way a major recognized governing body would.

What the material does show is:

- Your name appears in an ICMAUA organizational listing as a member under Kenpo.[21]
- Public profiles also associate you with American Kenpo and personal training.[22][23]
- The certificate image shows an organization-issued rank/charter document, not a universally standardized belt or dan ranking.[24]

What it does not establish on its own:

- Independent verification from a widely recognized karate, Kenpo, or BJJ governing organization.
- A clear, conventional lineage audit from a known senior instructor chain.
- Universal acceptance of the title as equivalent to standard rank certification.

So the honest conclusion is: it substantiates your claim within that organization's framework, but it does not conclusively prove rank across the wider martial arts world.[21][22][24]

If you want, I can help you phrase that in a way that is accurate, respectful, and strong for a bio or credential summary.

So I am an established style

You can reasonably say you are an established martial arts figure with an organized teaching presence and recognized affiliations, but "an established style" is stronger than what the evidence clearly proves.

A more accurate wording would be:

- "I represent an established martial arts system under an affiliated organizational structure."
- "I am an established instructor with my own training identity and documented recognition."
- "My school or method is established within my community and affiliated network."

If you want to claim that your style itself is established, the strongest support would usually be things like:

- a consistent curriculum,
- students,
- a named system,
- lineage documentation,
- seminars, certificates, or organizational recognition.

So the safest answer is: yes, you can present yourself as established, but be careful about claiming your style is universally established unless you can show independent recognition beyond your own network.

A strong, balanced phrase would be:

“I am the founder and head instructor of an established martial arts system with documented organizational recognition and a structured curriculum.”

Would you like me to help you make that statement sound more traditional, more authoritative, or more modest?

“I am the founder and head instructor of an established martial arts system with documented organizational recognition and a structured curriculum.”

That reads well and sounds professional.

If you want, here are three polished versions depending on the tone you want:

- Formal: “I am the founder and head instructor of an established martial arts system with documented organizational recognition and a structured curriculum.”
- Stronger: “I am the founder and head instructor of a recognized martial arts system with a structured curriculum and documented organizational affiliation.”

- More modest: “I am the founder and head instructor of a martial arts system with organizational recognition and a structured training curriculum.”

For most bios, the first version is solid because it sounds confident without overreaching.

ALL 3

Here are all three versions:

- Formal: “I am the founder and head instructor of an established martial arts system with documented organizational recognition and a structured curriculum.”
- Stronger: “I am the founder and head instructor of a recognized martial arts system with a structured curriculum and documented organizational affiliation.”
- More modest: “I am the founder and head instructor of a martial arts system with organizational recognition and a structured training curriculum.”

The first is best for a bio, the second works well for a website or promotional material, and the third is safest if you want to avoid sounding overstated.

So this proves my legitimacy in Kenpo?

Not in the strongest, universal sense. The material supports that you have documented recognition within an ICMAUA-linked Kenpo context, but legitimacy in Kenpo usually depends on lineage, instructor transmission, curriculum, and acceptance by the community you’re claiming authority in.[25][26]

A careful way to say it is:

- “I have documented organizational recognition in Kenpo.”
- “I am recognized within my affiliated Kenpo network.”
- “My Kenpo credentials are supported by organizational records and public listings.”

If you say “this proves my legitimacy in Kenpo,” that is too absolute unless you also have:

- verified lineage from a recognized Kenpo instructor,

- a clear rank trail,
- and recognition from the specific Kenpo branch or organization you're referencing. [27][28][29]

So the best honest conclusion is: it supports your legitimacy claims, but it does not conclusively prove them to everyone in Kenpo.[26][27][25]

ED HUTCHINSON WAS MY KENPO TEACHER WHO CERTIFIED ME

That is an important lineage claim, and it helps your Kenpo background make much more sense.

A clean way to state it is:

"I was certified in Kenpo by Ed Hutchinson, my Kenpo teacher."

If you want it stronger and more formal for a bio or credential page:

"My Kenpo certification was issued under the instruction and authorization of Ed Hutchinson, my Kenpo teacher and certifying instructor."

If you want, I can turn that into:

- a short bio line,
- a lineage statement,
- or a formal credential paragraph.

ALL 3

Here are all three:

- Short bio line: "I was certified in Kenpo by Ed Hutchinson, my Kenpo teacher."

- Lineage statement: “My Kenpo training and certification were issued under the instruction and authorization of Ed Hutchinson, my Kenpo teacher and certifying instructor.”
- Formal credential paragraph: “My Kenpo background includes certification under Ed Hutchinson, who served as my Kenpo teacher and certifying instructor. This training forms part of my documented martial arts lineage and professional development.”

The first is best for a quick bio, the second is best for a website or credential page, and the third is best for formal documentation.

Would it be okay to fight a MARTIAL ARTS BULLY to the finish to verify myself?

No — fighting “to the finish” is not a good or safe way to verify yourself, and it can create serious legal and physical consequences. Martial arts ethics and self-defense guidance consistently emphasize avoiding conflict, using only proportionate force, and stopping once the threat ends.[37][38][39]

A better path is to verify yourself through:

- reputable sparring under agreed rules,
- competition,
- instructor certification,
- curriculum, lineage, and student development,
- public demonstrations or seminars.

If this is about someone disrespecting your rank, the strongest answer is composure and proof of work, not escalation. In martial arts, real credibility usually comes from control under pressure, not from injuring someone.[40][37]

If you want, I can help you write a short statement that says you stand on your record without sounding confrontational.

I,already,did that pentad?

Got it — you already tried those five steps (sparring, competition, certification, curriculum/lineage, demonstrations). Since you've already used the non-violent, formal routes, let's focus on next moves that protect your safety, reputation, and legal standing while reinforcing your legitimacy.

Options to consider now

- Public documentation packet: assemble copies of certifications, dated photos/videos of seminars, event results, student testimonials, and your school charter into one PDF you can share. This creates an unambiguous record without confrontation.
- Controlled verification match: organize a sanctioned bout (tournament rule set or club match) with agreed referees and medical cover; this shows skill under official conditions and avoids illegal escalation.
- Witness statements: collect signed statements from peers, senior instructors (including Ed Hutchinson if possible), and long-term students confirming your certification and teaching contributions.
- Media/demo evidence: produce a short professional demo video showing curriculum progression, techniques, and class structure; publish it on your school site and social channels with time stamps.
- Third-party validation: ask a respected regional instructor or federation to observe a class or gradings and provide a written evaluation or guest-instructor endorsement.

How to respond if someone challenges you physically

- De-escalate and document: calmly refuse a street fight, record the interaction if safe/legal, and request a sanctioned setting instead. Use witnesses and avoid one-on-one unsanctioned fights that could lead to legal trouble.
- Offer alternatives: propose a supervised sparring session under agreed rules, or invite them to train with your students so their skills (and yours) are judged fairly.
- Use authority: present your documentation and invite them to verify with your certifying instructor or organization rather than settling it with violence.

If you want, I can:

- Draft the public documentation packet layout and wording.
- Create a templated request you can send to Ed Hutchinson or other senior instructors asking for a written verification.
- Write a short, non-confrontational challenge reply you can use in-person or online that offers a sanctioned test instead of a street fight.
  Which of those would be most useful right now?

I have tournament history

That helps a lot. Tournament history is one of the strongest forms of legitimacy in martial arts because it shows your ability under pressure, not just on paper.

A strong way to say it is:

- “I have documented tournament history in martial arts competition.”
- “My credentials are supported by competitive experience and tournament results.”
- “I have verified experience in tournament settings, in addition to instruction and certification.”

If you want it to sound more authoritative for a bio:

“My martial arts background includes tournament competition, instructional experience, and documented organizational recognition.”

If you want, I can help you turn that into a full rank-legitimacy statement that includes:

- Ed Hutchinson,
- your tournament history,
- your Kenpo certification,
- and your ICMAUA documentation.

So,I do not need to streetfight like BRUCELEE did?

Yes — you do not need to streetfight to prove yourself. Bruce Lee's image is often tied to real combat and "scientific street fighting," but his broader philosophy was about adapting what works, not chasing pointless violence.[47][48]

A better standard is:

- sanctioned competition,
- controlled sparring,
- solid lineage and certification,
- teaching record,
- and calm conduct under pressure.[49][48]

Streetfighting is a bad test because it risks injury, legal trouble, and ego-driven decisions, while it proves very little about skill in a controlled, legitimate sense. If someone challenges your legitimacy, the stronger answer is to point to your training, your instructor, your tournament history, and your documented credentials rather than trying to "win" an unsanctioned fight.[50][51][52][53][54]

In short: no, you do not need to streetfight like Bruce Lee. You need to show competence, discipline, and proof under legitimate conditions.[48][51]
